FROGS ON AN ISLAND

RAIN LANDS HUNDREDS NEAR THE LIGHTHOUSE

Batrachians Have Been Disappearing Due to Strenuous Efforts of Young Brothers and the Cat

Ever since the flood of Tuesday, when Nuuanu stream overflowed its banks and swept in a raging torrent down to the harbor, the little island near the lighthouse on which the Young brothers have their home, has been infested with hundreds and hundreds of frogs.

The frolicsome and pestiferous green-backs on the morning immediately following the flood swarmed on the verandas of the little frame house on Young's island and it was their united and prodigious croaking which aroused the brothers from their comfortable couches at an unusual and unseemly hour.

One of the brothers, hearing the peculiar noise, as of a host of automatic cash registers out of order, hastily arose, donning his nether garments, and proceeded on a tour of investigation.

No sooner had he opened the door and stepped, barefooted, onto the veranda, than his feet came in violent and slippery contact with a couple of big specimens of the frog family. The brother said something appropriate to the occasion and called the rest of the brothers.

The dawn was just breaking and the first slanting rays of the sun shone with a greenish glare on the backs of uncountable frogs.

"What are they?" asked one of the fraternity.

"Frogs, of course," said the discoverer of their noisome presence.

"When came they?" was the next question, as the speaker put on a heavy pair of top boots, not caring to squash promiscuous frogs in his trip out on the veranda.

"I suppose they were washed down by the flood yesterday," was the logical reply.

Just then, the frogs seemed inclined to enter in at the open door, the pet cat of the Young brothers sailed in among the slimy beasts and clawed right and left, catching several of the frogs in her jaws. The versatile feline made a good breakfast and then quit the job, so that the Young brothers were forced to get brooms and shovels to knock the remainder of Nuuanu's refugees from the veranda.

Swarms of frogs were noticed on the little island. They had hopped into the gasoline launches of the Young brothers. They had hid under the house. They had lined up in platoons on the sand and they were continually attempting to again gain the veranda. They were seen swimming in the harbor, and countless frog remains were observed along the little beach, the poor little beasts having been battered against bridges and piles and ships' bottoms.

The frogs have been gradually disappearing, since the flood, from the neighborhood of the small piece of land which the Youngs call their home, but their disappearance has chiefly been the result of strenuous efforts on the part of the brothers.

"We never expected to become rich so suddenly," said one of the brothers to a friend the other day.

"How rich?" asked the friend, biting like a fish at a piece of salt salmon.

"Why, look at the greenbacks that came our way."

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

Assistant District Attorney Dunne yesterday filed a motion for a new trial in the case of the United States vs. the Honolulu Plantation Company. The motion is to be presented before Judge Estee next Wednesday.

In the assignment of errors it is stated that the evidence is wholly insufficient to justify the verdict, in that there is no evidence to support the finding that the market value of the leasehold interest is of the sum of $34,000, or any sum in excess of $75,000. In support of this is attached an affidavit showing the judgment of the court after the first trial to have been $75,000 in full for all damages of every kind. For the same reason it is alleged that there was no evidence to justify the finding of the jury of damages in the amount of $8523.

It is further alleged that the valuation of the jury was a mere speculative one, and that jury gave undue and excessive weight to the expert testimony introduced by said defendant.

The plaintiff alleges that the court erred in allowing the testimony relative to the mill upon the plantation, and in allowing some of the questions asked by defendant of the experts.

Mr. Dunne also sets out the fact of the first trial, the subsequent order of Judge Estee in granting a new trial, upon the refusal of the defendant to accept a cut to $75,000, the amount fixed by the court. He says further that the evidence in the two cases was substantially the same; that but few additional witnesses were called, and upon the same pleadings and the same state of facts, the verdict should not have been above the sum of $75,000, the judgment in the first trial.

OLD WHALER PROGRESS CAREER HAS ENDED

Chicago, Feb. 26.—After years of rough service, the bark Progress, built for the whaling trade, met an inglorious end last evening in the South Chicago harbor.

Since the World's Fair, when the Progress rode the waters of the outer lagoon equipped as a model whaler, the ship has been moored in the South Chicago harbor. Some unknown person set fire to the vessel and she burned to the water's edge, no attempt being made to extinguish the fire.

The remnant of the old whaler will be blown to pieces by dynamite, as the fire left enough of the wreck to prove a menace to navigation.

The Progress, when in the whaling industry, was famed as a lucky ship. She was built in Westerly, R. I., in 1843, and was christened the William Phelps, being owned under that name by Charles P. Phelps until 1861, when she was sold to the United States Government for a storehouse. As such the Progress continued until the close of the Civil War. The vessel was sold by the Government at auction, in 1865, and became the property of William G. Brownell, New Bedford. Afterward she was rebuilt and christened Progress. She was fitted for the Arctic at a cost of $64,000, vessel and outfit, and placed in command of Captain James Dowden. The Progress was the last survivor of the five vessels which in 1871, at the time of the memorable disaster to the fleet, brought down the 1200 survivors. In 1876 the ship became the property of L. H. Bartlett & Sons, who paid for her $16,000. They remained her owners until she was sold to Henry E. Weaver and other Chicago parties for exhibition at the World's Fair. The Bartletts sent the Progress to the Arctic while they owned her and on one voyage she earned $200,000, returning a net profit of $50,000.

ONE WORD WAS ENOUGH

In the District of Kau recently, a certain man wished to get telephonic communication with another and being in a great hurry, was not made very happy when he found that a couple of Japanese had possession of the line. He waited for quite a long time and then went to the telephone again. The men were still talking and so another wait was indulged in. When the man in question went to the telephone once more, he was bound he would do something to get the fellows off. As it happened, there was with him at the time, a young man who understands somewhat of the Japanese language and he volunteered to do what he could.

Taking down the receiver, the young man listened for a little and finding that the Japanese were still talking, said just one word which, it is said, will make the meekest of the subjects of the Mikado froth at the mouth and do all kinds of desperate things. There was silence for a short period and then the Japanese got in their work. Every Japanese along the line was called up to find if any of them had been talking, and "Central" was kept busy answering the frantic appeals of the men to tell them the name of the fellow who said that one word. It is understood that strenuous efforts are still being made to find him.

It's a long way for a shilling remarked cabby, looking sulkily at his proper fare.

I know it is, said the lady quietly. If it had not been I should have walked.
